Nota histórica/biográfica

Eduardo Hernández “Guayo” (1916-1978) nació Eduardo Hernández Toledo en Cuba. Uno de los más reconocidos cameramen, como les decían, y periodistas en Cuba, “Guayo” comenzó su larga carrera trabajando como camarógrafo para el Noticiero Nacional de Cuba. Un innovador hombre de negocios, “Guayo” fundó sus propias compañías de producción de noticias, Cineperiódico y Noticuba, a veces llamada Noticuba-Bohemia, produciendo noticiarios que eran exhibidos en teatros de cine, y en televisión. Durante su extensa carrera profesional, Eduardo Hernández “Guayo” documentó y reportó eventos de importancia a nivel mundial a través de muchos países y continentes, como por ejemplo en Estados Unidos, Argentina, Colombia, Inglaterra, y México. En 1947, fue otorgado con un premio Juan Gualberto Gómez por filmar la Masacre de Orfila, el trágico evento causado por rivalidades entre grupos de policías que resultó en cinco muertes, incluyendo Emilio Tró, quién era buscado por rivales, y Aurora Soler, la esposa de Antonio Morín Dopico, jefe de la policía de Marianao. Morín Dopico y Aurora Soler, en estado avanzado de embarazo, eran los anfitriones de un almuerzo en donde se encontraba Emilio Tró, cuyos enemigos balacearon la casa sin importarles quien estaba presente. Morín Dopico pudo salir de la casa cargando a su pequeña hija en brazos, herida de bala. Un camarógrafo y fotógrafo dotado, “Guayo” ganó un total de ocho premios Juan Gualberto Gómez, el premio de más prestigio periodístico en Cuba.

En 1958, Eduardo Hernández “Guayo” y Agustín Alles Soberón fueron los primeros periodistas de la prensa cubana en llegar al campamento de Fidel Castro y el Movimiento 26 de Julio en la Sierra Maestra. Convivieron por semanas con los revolucionarios, entrevistaron a Fidel Castro y líderes de la revolución como el Che Guevara, filmaron el diario vivir de los revolucionarios y crearon una película con el propósito de recaudar dinero para la causa de la revolución: “Sierra Maestra: Baluarte de la Revolución Cubana”. En 1952, Fulgencio Batista se declaró presidente de Cuba cuando organizó un estado de sitio con el propósito de derrocar a Carlos Prío Socarrás de la presidencia de Cuba. Prío Socarrás fue el último presidente, elegido democráticamente, de Cuba. A partir de ese momento, la mayoría de los ciudadanos cubanos apoyaron la causa revolucionaria de Fidel Castro porque pensaban que la revolución culminaría en una nueva era democrática en Cuba al derrotar a Batista. Cuando Fulgencio Batista huyó al exilio en Santo Domingo,

"Guayo" filmó la marcha de Fidel Castro en la Habana y grabó las primeras palabras de Fidel Castro dirigidas al pueblo cubano al momento de su triunfo. Poco tiempo después, desilusionado con el cambio hacia el comunismo de Fidel Castro, "Guayo" abandonó a Cuba y se fue al exilio. Eduardo Hernández "Guayo" vivió en Nueva York, Venezuela, Puerto Rico, y Miami. En el exilio, produjo varias películas dedicadas a demostrar la traición del pueblo cubano por Fidel Castro y el movimiento revolucionario, particularmente "Historia de Una Traición", y "Yo Volveré". En su labor como reportero y camarógrafo, "Guayo" documentó y reportó tanto entrenamientos como misiones activas, de los grupos contrarrevolucionarios MRR, Movimiento de Recuperación Revolucionario, y Alpha 66, en múltiples atentados tratando de liberar a Cuba de la dictadura de Fidel Castro.

Eduardo Hernández "Guayo" trabajó como camarógrafo y fotógrafo para El Miami Herald, The Miami Herald, Bohemia; Replica, y El Nuevo Día, entre otros. "Guayo" era muy admirado y respetado por sus amigos y colegas, no solo por su talento, por ser uno de los más destacados y reconocidos periodistas de Cuba, sino como también por su compasión, gentileza, y jovial naturaleza humana. Eduardo Hernández "Guayo" fue sobrevivido por su segunda esposa, Marianna Hernández Abreu, madre de Luis Hernández Abreu, y por sus primeros hijos, Eduardo "Guayito", y Jorge (George) Hernández.

3	10	Journals - Bohemia , "Sensacional: Un comandante de Fidel Castro con las milicias de Caamaño", Bernardo Viera Trejo, photographs by Eduardo Hernández "Guayo"	Bernardo Viera Trejo and Eduardo Hernández "Guayo" travelled to Santo Domingo to interview Comandante Ramón "Pichirilo" Mejía. Mejía met Fidel Castro in Cayo Confites, when both participated in the failed attempt against the Trujillo regime. Fearing for his life, he sought refuge in Cuba, eventually returning to Santo Domingo. In 1956 because he was a sailor by profession, Mejía was asked to meet Fidel Castro in Mexico to be the second captain of the Granma yacht. One of the survivors of the Granma, Mejía fought with the Castro forces and was promoted to Comandante del Ejército Rebelde. He held various powerful positions within the Castro government until 1963, when during an official trip to Canada, he requested political asylum. After being granted asylum, he returned to Santo Domingo, where he was given a job in the customs office. Soon after, Pichirilo Mejía abandoned his job and joined the rebel militia of Coronel Caamaño in an effort to re-instate democratically elected Juan Bosch as President of the Dominican Republic.	1965 August 8

			The photograph of "Guayo" dressed as a mariscal is explained in a handwritten note as follows: "Esta fotografía es histórica y tiene que ver con los sucesos de Orfila donde Guayo filmó la matanza y fueron condenados a la prisión los responsables. A la derecha de Guayo está Genovevo Pérez Damera, jefe del ejército de Cuba del año 1945 al 1949. La película filmada por Guayo se empezó a exhibir en los cines pero el gobierno ordenó la suspensión de su exhibición en los cines. Genovevo se enteró de este asunto y ordena que se exhiba la película. Entonces, se reúne con Guayo para felicitarlo por la película y le dice qué puesto quiere en el ejército y Guayo le dice que lo nombren mariscal y Genovevo le dice pero yo soy el jefe del ejército. Entonces lo vistió de mariscal y lo acompañaba." The translation of this note is: This is an historic photograph and has to do with the incident at Orfila, where Guayo filmed the massacre and those responsible were sent to prison. To Guayo's right is Genovevo Pérez Damera, Chief Commander Officer of the Cuban army from 1945 to 1949.
